 - Neighborhood block watch and Officer Match up

- Each officer will have a neighborhood watch captain to contact through email and by phone. The block watch is not designed as 9-1-1 or 242-cops. It is designed to help overcome challenges and take away any positives to get used elsewhere.

6. Max Kauffman Attorney with Disability Rights New Mexico

- Max Kauffman discusses his views and experiences when working as a mental health attorney and interactions with police officers. He stated that if a public defender and a police officer can work together, then two different sides can work together to find common ground in moving forward. Aside from healing, we need to find some practical solutions in the area. An increase in police presence has a marginal effect on crime. But how officers present themselves in the community is essential.

7. Shaun Willoughby President Albuquerque Police Officer's Association

- Elected position in the APOA. The rank and file elect Shaun Willoughby to represent their views and interests in disciplinary proceedings and contract negotiations. Primarily be the voice of Albuquerque Police officers rank and file from lieutenants to patrolmen. They are not allowed to engage in any Facebook communication, and their opinion can't be formulated or exposed without bringing the department into disrepute.
